Article for the 2012 SOHN Annual Congress

The SOHN 36th Annual Congress and National Symposium has been a successful endeavor in imparting knowledge, skills, and inter-professional values on topics related to Otorhinolaryngology, Head and Neck Nursing. Indeed, the future of nursing lies in the collaboration with different modalities and different professions. No single professional entity or discipline works as a vacuum. Each one of us is interdependent of each other in delivering excellent outcome for the patient.

The use of a nurse-physician tandem in the symposium has reinforced the theme. This kind of framework is very commendable. It re-focuses and highlights the importance of the nurses, with the physician as a partner, in the delivery of care. The nurses may have an edge over the other disciplines by being methodical in the delivery of care, by working as a focal point in coordinating and collaborating with other professions, by reviewing the proper course of action before any malpractice sets in, by pursuing superior level of efficiency and effectiveness in the practice of health care, by being innovative through research, and by setting policies for the advancement of nursing. These are our niche.

The members of the SOHN need to have a cohesive group in the pursuit of its goals. The use of technology such as social media, internet, cloud-based computing, and mobile network has pushed our reach to people beyond our comprehension. Collaboration is much easier because of a more open and a faster mode of communication. All nurses should tap into these resources. Beyond technology, the conference provides an avenue for nurses to interact in a more personal way. As a social being, we still need a face-to-face interaction. All nurses are urged to be more sociable in the conferences. More activities to enhance networking in these kinds of conferences are encouraged. With a stronger voice and a solid number, the goals can be achieved faster and more effectively.

Feedback can give tremendous amount of information which may help in the pursuit of excellence in the delivery of care. For instance, problems and complications from treatment of patients can be discussed openly in any communication platform. Patients, family members, nurses and other allied healthcare professions may have the information on how to take care of a particular problem or complication, thereby, reaching to a possible solution faster and more effectively. The problem can be solved quicker. The outcomes will be better for the patient.

The nurses play multi-faceted roles. In each role, collaboration is central in imparting these functions. This is not a new tool for the nurses in the advancement of its role and in the constant quest to provide efficient and effective delivery of care. Collaboration has taken a more dynamic stance in the field of healthcare delivery and advancement. As nurse, we should be dynamic as well.
